Dear Mrs. Dodge:

When Mr. Casgrain was in New York I believe he spoke to you or Miss Kiplinger about the availability of Miss Dorothy de la Pale, who set up the UNRRA Trading Bureau for displaced persons. A sheet is enclosed which will tell you something about her work and background. Miss de la Pale is now with the Community Chests and Councils, Inc., in New York. If an occasion arises when you might ask her to speak, I suggest you get in touch with her directly on the telephone. I don't know to what extent she will be willing to take on engagements but she has an interesting story to tell if you can persuade her to tell it.

I think Mr. Casgrain also spoke to you about Mr. George S. Mooney, formerly Chief Executive Officer of the Administrative Council of the European Regional Office of UNRRA. Mr. Mooney is now on a visit to China. When he returns at the end of March he is going to do some speaking on the West Coast before coming East. I think he may get to New York for one or two speeches in May but he is not anxious to make a large number of them and wants primarily business groups.

Sincerely yours,

Mrs. Harrison Thomas

New York, New York

Dear Mrs. Thomas:

Mr. Casgrain tells me that when he was in New York he talked with you about the possibility of someone from UNRRA speaking at an inter-collegiate conference at Lafayette College in Easton, Pennsylvania, on 29 March. I tried to talk with you on the telephone last week, and you were out of the office. Yesterday I tried again, but too late in the afternoon, and today I find your office is closed, and evidently will be tomorrow.

While it has not yet been officially announced, the UNRRA Council is scheduled to meet during the latter half of March. Under these circumstances it will not be possible to schedule many of the UNRRA staff members during that period - certainly not any of its top officials. There is a possibility, however, that Alastair Taylor, a young Canadian who is special assistant to the Director of Public Information, might be available on that date if you thought he would meet your requirements for the occasion. While he is only about thirty years old, he has taught history at the University of California, and is the co-author of three books on World History which are used as texts in a good many college courses. He has done a good deal of speaking for us, and before college groups - in fact, he is speaking tomorrow night at Sarah Lawrence College, and you could doubtless get a report on that direct if you wished. A sheet giving some further details is enclosed.

One other person who occurs to me is Mr. John J. Corson, who was formerly Deputy Director General in charge of the Bureau of Finance and Administration of UNRRA, and is now Director of Research of the Washington Post. Mr. Casgrain's note to me says you want "a consideration of the problems concerning any international agency in securing the cooperation of member nations on specific problems; UNRRA's experience in building up a staff, in getting it to operate effectively and without discrimination ..." etc. Mr. Corson would be able to deal with those matters from his experience in UNRRA, as would also Mr. Taylor, who is also interested in the historical growth of the idea of the interdependence of people, states and nations.

Sincerely yours,

The Next Ninety Days

by CLARK M. EICHELBERGER

The next ninety days may witness an amazing series of events in the establishment of the United Nations. Indeed, if these days are passed successfully much of the confusion and suspicion now existing might be swept aside and the world put firmly on the road to security, prosperity and an expansion of human rights.

The General Assembly of the United Nations will meet in January to fulfill the San Francisco Charter. It will elect the non-permanent members of the Security Council, all of the members of the Economic and Social Council, part of the members of the Trusteeship Council, a Secretary General, and select permanent headquarters.

If present plans hold, the Assembly, after organization, will appoint a committee on atomic energy. It was originally planned that the Assembly would meet for organization purposes only, after which it would adjourn to a later date in the Spring for a debate on world events. The suggestion, however, that the Assembly appoint a committee on atomic energy may well produce a full-dress debate on security and disarmament.

If this commission goes to work promptly as public opinion should insist, it may very well be that within ninety days it may have preliminary conclusions ready for the Spring sessions of the Assembly. Its recommendations will undoubtedly deal with security measures to be carried out by the Security Council, and measures for the peace-time use of atomic energy through the Economic and Social Council.

The economic problem is also being faced. The American and British Governments have suggested that the United Nations Organization call a conference to establish an international trade organization. The broad program of recovery touches full employment, the speeding up of international trade, reduction of trade barriers and abolition of cartels.

The next ninety days should see the establishment of the International Bank and Monetary Fund. Enough ratifications are now in sight to meet the deadline of December 31st when a certain number of ratifications were to be deposited.

The next ninety days should see a meeting of the Assembly of the League of Nations to transfer its assets, property, obligations and machinery to the UNO.

The Economic and Social Council could very well make one of the first items on its agenda the appointment of a commission on human rights with instructions to begin work on a declaration of human rights.

Thus, between New Year's and the first of April, the United Nations Organization can be an established Organization, and its various agencies and autonomous bodies can commence to function. The world may at last see through the clouds toward international security.

In the face of these practical and attainable steps, it would seem that public opinion should be concentrated on them, rather than upon nebulous theories of "world government." Certainly no supporter of the United Nations Organization could possibly object to discussion as to how the United Nations, once it is set up, can be strengthened looking toward what some of the advocates call "world government." But what supporters of the United Nations Organization do object to is any effort to place "world government" as an alternative to the United Nations Organization. They object to any effort to weaken public support of the United Nations Organization at the very moment when wholehearted public support may attain great advances within ninety days.

We believe that all men of good will should recognize two facts. First, that there is no alternative to the Charter and that the United Nations Organization must be the beginning of any world system. Second, the Charter contains many flexible provisions so that much can be obtained without amendments. The Government of the United States today is a much stronger Government than was originally established on the basis of the Constitution. This strengthening was accomplished not through Constitutional amendments but through development. The way to strengthen the United Nations is not to try to amend its Charter even before the organization is functioning, but to take advantage of every clause and obligation in the Charter for the strongest fulfillment. Indeed, the obligations which the nations have taken in the Charter are adequate, to maintain permanent peace, expand prosperity and promote human rights, if the nations are willing to live up to their obligations to a maximum. The United States must not only profess its United Nations ideals; it must follow practical policies to give effect to its ideals.

Some weeks ago our Association said that policy was needed in three fields: atomic energy, economic cooperation and trusteeship. The Government has announced policies on the first two. The trusteeship system, however, will lag and postwar imperialism grow until the United States announces that the bases which it retains in the Pacific will be placed under United Nations trusteeship. It is hoped that the Government will announce policy on this third point before the General Assembly meets in January.

It is time for all who believe in international cooperation to give their major concentration on the success of the United Nations Assembly and on the attainment of these objectives outlined within the next ninety days.

FAO: First in the Field

by HOWARD R. TOLLEY

At a little after 4 o'clock on the afternoon of last October 16 the first of the specialized organizations by which the United Nations hope to help mankind climb up from his jungle officially came into being. S. L. Mansholt, chief delegate for the Netherlands, put his name to the constitution of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations. His was the twentieth signature—the minimum number required to bring FAO to life. The ceremony took place at the opening session of the first FAO conference, held in Quebec. A total of 30 nations signed on the first day. By the time the conference closed November 1 the new organization had 42 members.

It was a truly historic occasion. The birth of FAO meant that the United Nations actually had begun their effort to work together to keep the peace and make it worth keeping. Several others of the international agencies that will be needed were in various stages of development, but FAO had become a reality, ready to serve as a model and testing ground for the organizations that were to come.

Also, creation of FAO marked the formal acceptance by the nations of the world of a fresh and dynamic set of ideas. They are ideas so simple and so direct that in the past, although many individuals had voiced them, governments seldom bothered to examine them. The core of those ideas is just this: modern science, for the first time in history, has made possible the production of enough food to provide everyone in the world with a healthful diet; both producers and consumers will gain through abundant production of food and other farm and forest products and steps to make all that abundance available to those who need it.

The Food and Agriculture Organization has two great objectives. One is to raise world-wide levels of nutrition. The other is to raise the levels of living of food and agriculture producers everywhere.

Thus, although the world at large did not appear to be greatly stirred at the event, the conference that created FAO and set it in motion broke new ground in human history. The people who participated were keenly aware of this. The recognition kept cropping up in their remarks and in the seriousness with which they went about their work.

What will it lead to? That is an entirely different question—one that cannot begin to be answered for months or perhaps years. The people at the conference realized that, too. Quebec has seen a lot of history for a New World town. You can see reminders of it on every side, reminders of lost causes as well as those that were won. That kind of atmosphere has a way of checking over-enthusiasm.

Still, as the delegates wound up their work and headed for home nearly all of them seemed to share a sense of satisfaction that could not have come altogether from the bracing air and warm sun of Indian summer along the St. Lawrence. It wasn't likely, either, that the feeling of achievement was based entirely on the actual accomplishments of the conference, solid as those were.

After all, the meeting accomplished only three results of lasting interest. The conference officially created FAO, organized it, and laid down some general policy recommendations for the executive committee and director-general to follow during the first year. Questions of just who will make up the FAO staff and exactly what they will do first and how they will go about their work were left to the committee and the director to answer during coming months.

Then what, you may ask, was the further basis for the optimism? It was the conviction that FAO will succeed in helping the people of the world, and that its influence will begin to be felt before very long. No one could be sure, of course, but the hope was based on more than wishful thinking. The record of the conference itself gave promise for the future. The signs were plain for everyone to read—the wide representation, the caliber of the delegates, their attitudes, and the way they went about their work.

The great majority of the people of the earth were represented at Quebec through the delegations of their governments. Thirty-seven member nations took part actively in the conference. They were: Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, China, Colombia, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Egypt, France, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Iceland, India, Liberia, Luxembourg, Mexico, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Panama, Peru, Philippine Commonwealth, Poland, Union of South Africa, United Kingdom, United States of America, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, Syria and Lebanon. The two last-named countries had started out as observers at the conference and subsequently had applied for membership and had been admitted unanimously.

Five other nations that were not able to send delegations to Quebec had become full members of FAO before this conference closed. They were: Bolivia, Chile, Ecuador, Paraguay and Uruguay.

In addition, accredited observers were there from the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the Byelo-Russian and Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republics, and Argentina.

Inability of the Russian delegation to sign the constitution during the conference was a disappointment to everyone. The U.S.S.R. had been represented at the Hot Springs conference where the idea of FAO first was developed in the spring of 1943, and had participated actively in the work of the Interim Commission which in the meantime had paved the way for the actual creation of FAO. Russia's active participation, in fact, was continued at Quebec. As observers, members of her good sized and able delegation took part both in the plenary sessions and the work of committees.

Although Russia's decision not to become a full member of FAO at that time put something of a dent—and the only one of importance—in the conference's record of success, the action was not necessarily final nor was it as jarring as one might suppose. L. B. Pearson, conference chairman, outlined the situation lucidly at one of the closing sessions.

"This morning," he said, "I had a conversation with

ASSOCIATION NOTES

Maryland

The United Nations Association of Maryland spread the "Atomic Power" issue before the public for general discussion at a capacity meeting in Baltimore on November twenty-third. The subject was titled "Living with the Split Atom." Dr. Richard D. Present, nuclear physicist on the Manhattan Project, was the speaker. The Reverend Dr. Don Frank Fenn and Mr. A. D. Emmart opened the question and discussion period with brief remarks on the moral and political aspects, respectively, of life with the atom bomb. Excellent newspaper and radio coverage, as well as general public interest, insured the success of the meeting in spite of the fact that it had to be moved bodily to a different auditorium because of an emergency in the heating system of the Museum Auditorium.

On Saturday, November 24, a special group of people was invited to a luncheon to meet Dr. Present and to talk over the work of the Maryland Association with Mr. Frederick C. McKee, Treasurer of the National Association.

Los Angeles

At the November meeting of the monthly series arranged by the Southern California branch of the Association, the trials of the war criminals was the subject. A conference, commemorating the birthday of Woodrow Wilson was arranged, which was to discuss the work of the United Nations Assembly.

Minnesota

Motion pictures are now being used extensively by the Minnesota United Nations Committee, and Mrs. A. J. McGuire, Executive Secretary, tells us that they have been quite successful. "The Peace Builders" is the film being shown currently.

A heavy schedule of speaking engagements continues to keep the MUNC speakers' panel busy. The topics most frequently requested are atomic energy control and the San Francisco Charter.

Bridgeport

At a recent meeting of its Executive Committee, the Bridgeport, Connecticut Peace Council voted to affiliate with the AAUN.

Located at 925 Main Street, the Peace Council has an Executive Committee and a Board of Directors representing almost all phases of public life in the community. Mayor Jasper McLevy is Honorary President, John Shenton is President and Mrs. Frederick French and J. MacDonald Isaacs are the Vice-Presidents. Our Bridgeport members will want to get in touch with the Council office and give their aid as speakers, etc.

We are happy to welcome another vigorous local group into the national Association.

St. Louis

Speaking on "America Faces a New World," Mr. Louis Dolivet met with members of the St. Louis branch of the AAUN. Mr. Dolivet is Editor of FREE WORLD magazine.

Miss H. Lorinne Pickett, Secretary of the St. Louis group, reports that Mr. Dolivet's talk stressed the importance of increased support of the United Nations, and that it was received most enthusiastically by his audience.

Chapel Hill

John Bothwell McConaughy, Professor of Political Science at the University of South Carolina has written a comprehensive article on Atomic Energy and International Relations, for the October issue of THE SOUTH AND WORLD AFFAIRS. This magazine is published by the Southern Council on International Relations at Chapel Hill, North Carolina. The Council cooperates closely with the Association in its program.

In his article, Dr. McConaughy presents the various viewpoints on control of atomic energy, pointing out very strongly that "the idea of keeping the atomic bomb a secret is an extremely dangerous idea because it is based upon a completely false conception of science. Science is dynamic, not static."

Canada

With the October-November issue, the name of the United Nations Society News has been changed to "United Nations News." A short biography of Professor John P. Humphrey, new president of the Montreal Branch, is given, together with excerpts from his acceptance speech.

"What Have They Done Since San Francisco?" is the title of the section on news of the agencies of the UNO. An interesting column on another page is devoted to sections of the debate in the Canadian Parliament on the Charter. Russell T. Kelley, National President of the Canadian United Nations Society, has recently returned from a trip to Western Canada, and gives his impressions of the local groups in Winnipeg, Regina, Vancouver and Victoria.

Mr. Eric W. Morse has accepted appointment as National Secretary to replace Dr. H. J. Keith.

China

From C. C. Cheng, we have this sketch of the work being done in China:

The Chinese Association for the United Nations was inaugurated last June 26th. It was reorganized from the Chinese Association for the League of Nations. Its program will undoubtedly be a great contribution to the friendly relationship of China and the United Nations.

It is easy to recall that when the Chinese Association for the League of Nations came into being, China as a member of the League of Nations was not in an active position in the family of nations. The Chinese people in general were then naturally not as interested in international activities as the Chinese are today. Attempting to promote deeper international consciousness in the Chinese people, the Chinese Association for the League of Nations worked strenuously to furnish them with necessary information of international developments. They tried to inculcate in the masses the idea that China is not only a member of the international family, but that it can simultaneously play an important role among the nations. In recent years the Chinese people have become much concerned in international relations and the idea of an indivisible world has prevailed among their leaders. They are very clear-minded as to what they can do and what they should now do. On these aspects we must not forget to give credit to the Chinese Association for the League of Nations.

Since the Sino-Japanese War broke out on July 7, 1937, almost all the coastal provinces were occupied by the enemy. The capital of the National Government was moved from Nanking to Hankow first and then to Chungking. The Association, however, worked even harder than before with proportionately better results. According to the data of 1944, it registered six million four hundred thousand members throughout the whole country, including hundreds of government officials, educators, cultural workers and progressive leaders in different fields. President Chiang Kai-shek has been elected honorable chairman for several successive years. Dr. Chu Chia-hua, Minister of Education, president of the Academia Sinica and member of the National Government, served as president. It maintains its headquarters in Chungking right now, and issues a monthly publication, "International Affairs." Branch offices are located in all major cities such as Shanghai, Hankow, Chengtu, Kunming and so forth. Each agency has its own publication, adapted to its local requirements, issued monthly, fortnightly or weekly. Students of civil affairs considered the Chinese Association for the United Nations one of the strongest, most active and best equipped of organizations.

Now that Japan has surrendered, I am sure that the National Government will soon move its capital to Nanking where the Association Headquarters also will be located. Tremendous work is ahead. Facing the present international situation, no individual can deny his or her responsibility to help forward the indispensable work of the United Nations Organization. Furthermore, regarding the miserable picture of World War I and World War II, any person of vision can well understand the weak points of past international organizations and the defects of the present civilization. They will try more eagerly to bring the East and West closer together and to promote a new civilization movement. This will be a tremendous factor in preventing a next war and promoting world peace. Therefore the Chinese Association for the United Nations has now a heavier mission on its shoulders and its program should be enlarged to reach to more comprehensive achievement.

Cleveland

The Council on World Affairs is cooperating with the Cleveland Peace Committee and the Town Meetings of Greater Cleveland in a series of public meetings on "International Organization—Will It Succeed This Time?"

In an afternoon session of analysis and discussion of the organization and operation of the United Nations Charter, the speakers were Rufus S. Day, Jr., Brooks Emeny, Mabel Head, Wilbur W. White, and Shepherd L. Witman. Daniel E. Morgan, President of the Town Meetings of Greater Cleveland, presided. Mr. Emeny is President of the Council on World Affairs, a local independent organization devoted to international affairs.

Dr. Philip C. Jessup, Professor of International Law, Columbia University, addressed the second meeting on "Diplomatic Issues In Building the Peace."

San Fernando

In its latest Bulletin to members, the United Nations Committee of the San Fernando Valley urges that attention be given to trusteeship of bases under the United Nations, that strong support be centered upon UNRRA and that expressions of opinion be written on international control of the atomic bomb.

Monday night forums are a feature of the winter program of the Committee, which is under the leadership of Mrs. Alex Gottlieb.

UNITED NATIONS YOUTH

The central unit in New York of United Nations Youth at its December meeting elected officers as follows: President, Stephen Schwebel, James Madison High School; Vice President, Sheldon Waldman, Stuyvesant High School; Secretary, Florence Sher, High School of Music and Art; and Treasurer, Theodore Mex, Newtown High School. These four officers, together with the chairmen of standing committees on aid to foreign youth, the bulletin, and radio and discussion work, will comprise the executive board of the group. At the December meeting the speaker was Dr. Joseph Morel, Consul for Czechoslovakia in New York, who gave an interesting talk on the situation of youth in Czechoslovakia today. His address was followed by the showing of a film depicting Czechoslovakia as it existed before the war. Members of the group had each brought a pair of shoes or other article of clothing to be sent to youth in liberated areas in Europe, and after hearing Dr. Morel, they unanimously decided that the December package should be sent to Czech students.

Meanwhile, the United Nations Youth movement is going ahead in other states and cities. The United Nations Association of Maryland held an Inter-High School Congress of ninety delegates from all public and private schools in Baltimore, who devoted a large part of their program to discussing the need for a United Nations Youth organization under the leadership of the local UNA. A continuing committee, comprised of one delegate from each school, is setting up plans for future work.

The Southern California Branch of the UNA reports that its committee on education is studying the best way to develop units of United Nations Youth for high school students. In Minnesota, Mrs. Arthur Brin of Minneapolis has been appointed state chairman on youth education for the Minnesota Committee. Mrs. Brin's first step is to call together some twenty-five leaders of youth-serving groups, such as the YMCA, YWCA, Girl Scouts, Boy Scouts, Neighborhood Houses, schools and the Public Library. This group will serve as a clearing house for suggestions for youth programs and will consider the formation of a junior division of the Minnesota UNA. It is thought that this junior division might sponsor one or two educational projects during the course of the year for and by the youth of the community. Mrs. Brin's committee will also promote the National Student Contest throughout the state.

On December 5th the New Jersey United Nations Youth group which was started at the Buxton Country Day School, in Short Hills, held its third meeting. Representatives of a number of public and private schools attended and discussed the problem of just how the New Jersey units will be organized, whether in individual schools or by areas. They felt it was important to work out this problem carefully, since it is not possible for students to attend late afternoon meetings at points too far distant from their schools.

Through the generosity of Mr. Thomas J. Watson and the International Business Machines Corporation, distribution of 50,000 copies of this issue of CHANGING WORLD to potential members throughout the country has been made possible.

the Head of the Soviet Delegation. He assured me that his Government has the same objectives and sets for itself the same tasks as FAO, that it endorses the idea of international cooperation for the improvement of agricultural production and the bettering of the food situation of the United Nations.

"The Government of the U.S.S.R. feels, however, that the organizational forms of FAO still require study. It has also become necessary for the Soviet Union to consult those of its Republics which are large producers of agricultural products and agricultural raw materials.

"For these reasons the U.S.S.R. is abstaining from becoming a member of FAO at this time, and its representatives will continue to attend the First Session of FAO only as observers.

"I know that I am speaking for every member of the Conference when I say that it is our earnest hope that the Government of the U.S.S.R. will soon be able to accept the Constitution of FAO, which is the first of the specialized organizations to be set up by the United Nations. The U.S.S.R., as an indispensable member of the United Nations and as one of the nations which has already ratified the UNO Charter, will be greatly interested and concerned in the work of FAO. We hope, therefore, that it will not be long before it expresses that interest by accepting all the rights and obligations of full membership in our Organization."

So far as representation goes, there is no need to fear that FAO will be a minority voice crying in the wilderness. But the mere number of member nations does not tell the whole story. The kind of people that nations send to represent them can mean a lot, too. The nations sent their best to Quebec.

No matter whether a delegation numbered one or 30, each country had one chief representative who was its member of the conference and cast its own vote. One glance around the members' table at the plenary sessions showed the stature of the participants. They included most of the world's top-ranking administrators in the fields of food and agriculture. Besides Secretary Anderson of the United States, four other ministers or secretaries of agriculture were there, together with other cabinet members and leading officials. Backing up the members was a distinguished group of experts—scientists, economists and other specialists, many with world-wide reputations.

Consider, for instance, the make-up of the United States delegation, which numbered about three dozen. From the agricultural committees of Congress, there were Senators Elmer Thomas and Raymond Willis, and Representatives John Flannagan and Clifford Hope. There were the heads of the four great national farm organizations; the president of the National League of Women Voters, Anna Lord Strauss; there were Henry Graves, former dean of the Yale College of Forestry; Dr. Thomas Parran, Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, and other leading specialists and administrators from Federal Departments and the Nation's great system of land-grant colleges and universities.

As if the very choice of such men and women were not enough, practically every nation put on the record in black and white its attitude toward FAO. "We know that the peace can be won," President Truman said in his message to the conference. "One of the major victories can be won at Quebec. . . . The success of this all-important first step in the life of the Food and Agriculture Organization is the primary aim of my country's delegation." Secretary Anderson opened his formal statement with this sentence: "The Government of the United States of America lends its wholehearted support to the work we are here about to begin." P. J. Noel Baker, Minister of State in the British cabinet, used these words to make plain his Government's attitude: "We believe in FAO. We are determined that now and hereafter it shall succeed." The list of such declarations was long, and the tone unvarying.

Fine words, yes; and when the conference buckled down to work, it put them into practice. Discussions were frank yet friendly. Differences of opinion never obscured agreement on fundamentals or prevented willingness to compromise details. The discussions, incidentally, even down to committee sessions, were more open to the press than those of any previous international conference.

The recommendations that the conference adopted hold great promise. The committees at Quebec were not meeting to give the assembled experts a chance to write papers displaying their scholarship in their several fields. The idea was to put before the whole conference, and then pass on to the executive committee and director-general, a set of clear-cut directions as to the course of FAO's work for the first year. This was done; and thanks to the careful preparatory work of the Interim Commission, done in a surprisingly short time.

The recommendations might be called the general sailing directions for the organization. They are particularly impressive in the light of the limited field of FAO operations. From the very start, when the idea of the organization was conceived at Hot Springs on the initiative of President Roosevelt, it had been agreed that FAO ought not to be an "action" agency. The constitution of FAO makes that point clear. The organization cannot buy, sell or transport food or other farm and forest products. It cannot promulgate or enforce international trade programs or regulations. It cannot compel member nations or other international agencies to do anything.

One of the important things FAO can do is to collect, analyze and make available to all its member nations the latest scientific and economic information about producing, distributing and using food. You can see how useful this exchange of knowledge will be when you consider how much more food will have to be produced and how many advances in the science of nutrition must be made in order to give all the people of the world enough to eat, and how many improvements must be made in distribution before we can wipe out the paradox of food surpluses in some parts of the world while millions of families still are going hungry. The nations of the world have much to learn from each other.

FAO, however, will not be content to just make the facts available. It will make recommendations, strong, pointed recommendations, to member governments and other world agencies. And to help put its recommendations into effect, it will organize missions of experts to aid nations who ask for their services, and give other forms of technical help. The policy guides established at Quebec show how active FAO will be even though it is not an "action" agency.

Just as an example, one of the first tasks FAO has set for itself is creating a comprehensive picture of the present world food situation—where the needs for different kinds of food are greatest, and where apparent "surpluses" exist or are likely to occur in the great producing countries. FAO will not just point out the trouble spots; it will follow through with down-to-earth suggestions as to how member nations or international groups can remedy the bad situations.

A keen awareness that FAO will be only one of several United Nations agencies was another encouraging feature of the conference. The director-general was instructed to work as closely as possible with the other organizations that are expected soon—the Bank, the Fund, the Health Organization, and with those that may begin to take shape soon, such as an international trade organization. FAO is looking forward to being associated with the Social and Economic Council of the United Nations Organization as soon as it is set up. It was definitely decided to make the permanent headquarters of FAO the same as that of the UNO. Meanwhile the temporary seat is Washington.

There is no better way to gauge the intentions of a new organization than the character of the person chosen to head it. When the conference unanimously elected Sir John Orr as the first director-general of FAO, it proved that it stood behind every one of the high principles it was setting down on paper.

"That brave, persistent Scottish prophet, that pioneer of nutrition, that indefatigable researcher, that prophet of

Question Box on the United Nations

QUESTION: Did Uruguay recently propose a plan for peace?

ANSWER: Uruguay's proposal calls for joint intervention in the Western Hemisphere against any country that drastically violates the essential human rights of its citizens and does not live up to its international obligations.

QUESTION: Will private organizations be able to participate in the work of the Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization of the United Nations?

ANSWER: Yes. The Organization has power to consult and cooperate with non-governmental international organizations in the field. Also, each government is to set up a National Commission representative of the Government and of interested groups to advise its Delegation to the Organization.

QUESTION: Under what law are the war criminal trials being held?

ANSWER: Throughout the war, the Allied leaders made it clear that war criminals would be brought to justice. The present trials are being conducted by the International Military Tribunal set up by the United States, France, Great Britain, and the Soviet Union for the trial and punishment of the major war criminals of the European Axis. Their agreement established individual responsibility for crimes against peace.

QUESTION: What did the recent United Nations Educational Conference achieve?

ANSWER: The constitution for a United Nations Educational, Cultural and Scientific Organization was unanimously adopted. This Organization will work to promote mutual understanding among nations and "a truer and more perfect knowledge of each other's lives." The Organization will be composed of a General Conference, an Executive Board, and a Secretariat. An Interim Commission was set up to work until the full Organization came into being.

QUESTION: What does the phrase "nuclear union" mean in the Dublin statement?

ANSWER: Several people meeting at Dublin, N. H., while endorsing the idea of a world federal government, favored the United States first entering a union with the English-speaking nations and other nations "where individual liberty exists" as a step toward world government. Although many people endorse the idea of a world government, it is generally believed that this cannot be achieved overnight, and that progress toward greater international organization must be made with and through the United Nations.

UNO Assembly Meeting

At an all-day public conference on December 14 at Town Hall in New York, the Association presented nationally known authorities speaking on the problems facing the United Nations Assembly meeting in January. Dr. James T. Shotwell spoke on Security; Dr. Harold Urey, former Nobel prize winner, and Clark M. Eichelberger gave their views on control and inspection of atomic energy; Arthur Sweetser told of the requisites for the UNO site; and John Foster Dulles keynoted the meeting with an address on the Assembly. The afternoon session covered Economic and Social Progress, with Mr. Thomas J. Watson and Mr. Francis J. Russell speaking; Trusteeship, Mr. Ralph Bunche of the Department of State; Human Rights, Dr. Henry A. Atkinson and Dr. Philip Jessup; and a panel on Freedom of Communications, with Brigadier General David Sarnoff presiding.

The Hotel Astor in New York City was the scene of the dinner at which Dean Virginia Gildersleeve and Governor Harold Stassen spoke on the work of the UNO. A capacity audience heard the speakers express their earnest hope that public support will be given to the work that must be done to help make the United Nations a going concern.

For the convenience of our members who were not able to attend the program on December 14th, the proceedings are being printed. The charge is 25 cents.

Have You Seen —

GUIDE TO COMMUNITY ACTIVITY FOR UNITED NATIONS COMMITTEES. This pamphlet gives concrete suggestions on ways to make your group activities more effective. Advice on literature distribution placing of speakers, use of radio, how to handle publicity, arranging meetings, planning exhibits and other projects are given. Price 15 cents.

YOU AND THE UNITED NATIONS: PROGRAM MATERIAL FOR YOUNG PEOPLE, was prepared by a workshop of program directors of the principal youth-serving organizations, who agreed when they met together last August that their world citizenship programs needed pointing up to our new responsibilities as a member of the United Nations. The pamphlet contains annotated lists of appropriate films, books, games, songs, etc., as well as discussion outline for young people, on the United Nations, and a dramatization of the Security Council called "The United Nations Acts." Price 15 cents.

WE, THE PEOPLES, is a concise history of the evolution of the United Nations from the writing of the Atlantic Charter to the present. It was prepared for use by secondary school teachers and students for factual information on the origin of the United Nations, but it is hoped that the pamphlet will find a wide usefulness among other groups. Price 15c.

greater human welfare" was the way one of his colleagues described him. High praise, but not a line of it was overstatement.

Sir John for years has enjoyed a worldwide reputation as a nutritionist, which he added to recently through his part in the food programs raised the average level of nutrition in Great Britain to unprecedented levels during the lean war years. He is widely known, too, as an agricultural scientist and a research administrator. Years ago he founded the Rowett Institute for Research in Animal Nutrition at Aberdeen, Scotland, and served as its director until the British election a few months ago, when he was elected a member of Parliament for the Scottish Universities. His success as a farmer is perhaps not so well known on this side of the water. In addition to being interested in the Institute's 1,000 acre stock farm, he for a long time has owned and operated a large general farm in Scotland.

In rugged health at 65, he is eager to get down to the business of making FAO a living force in the world. On the day of his election he told the conference, in his rolling Scotch burr, just how he viewed his task. "All the governments," he said, "have agreed to cooperate in a great world food scheme, which will bring freedom from want to all men, irrespective of race or color. . . . If the nations of the world are going to get together to feed the people of the world, they must increase the production of the most important foods. . . . There should be no slump in agriculture after this war, such as after the last war. . . ."

On the last day of the conference, Sir John, with sincerity in every line of his craggy face, made a declaration of loyalty to all of the member nations of FAO. It was an impressive occasion. In a world where narrow concepts of nationalism have caused so many hopes to wither, it may have been the most significant action of all.

These are some of the reasons why the hopes of success for FAO seem firmly grounded. Whether FAO does succeed will mean a lot to the happiness and well-being of this and future generations. Its possibilities for economic benefits are great, but these are small indeed compared with the part it can play as one of a whole group of agencies for keeping the peace.

Sir John put it this way: "FAO is the world's answer to the atomic bomb. If the nations cannot agree on food, they can agree on nothing. If they can agree, it is likely that before long they will find it easier to agree on other matters."

Mr. Tolley is Chief of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics of the United States Department of Agriculture and vice chairman, Executive Committee, FAO.

ILO

The future status of the ILO and its relationship to the United Nations Organization has not yet been determined, but in the meantime it is carrying on its program.

The Governing Body which met immediately following the adjournment of the ILO Conference in Paris on November 5th, elected Guildhaume Myrddin-Evans, Under Secretary of the British Ministry of Labor, as its new chairman. He replaces Carter Goodrich, Professor of Economics at Columbia University and a member of the Commission to Study the Organization of Peace. David Zellerbach of San Francisco and Leon Jouhaux of Paris were elected vice chairmen.

The Governing Body voted to hold the next ILO Conference in Montreal on September 19th, 1946. It will deal with the future of the ILO, the director's report, minimum standards of social policy in dependent territories, welfare of children and young workers.

The Maritime Preparatory Technical Conference opened in Copenhagen on November 15th. On the agenda were such day by day problems as wages and hours of work on board ship, leave, accommodations, recognition of seafarers' organizations, continuous employment, and social insurance.

Members of the ILO's correspondence committee on accident provisions which was formed in 1926 met in Montreal on November 26 to discuss a draft model safety code for factories.

The third regional conference of American states will open in Mexico City on April 1st, 1946, at the invitation of the Mexican government. The first and second regional American conferences were held in Santiago, Chile, in 1936, and in Havana in 1939.

Peru recently ratified eleven international conventions, bringing the total to 913 ratifications of the 67 conventions adopted by the ILO since 1919. Fifty-one countries have ratified more than one convention. The United States has ratified 5 conventions since it joined the ILO in 1934.

League of Nations

While the Preparatory Commission of the United Nations is considering the question of relationship of League agencies to the United Nations, the League itself is taking steps to effect the transfer of such assets, functions and activities, as may be considered desirable, to the United Nations Organization. Sean Lester, acting Secretary General of the League of Nations, received permission from the States Members of the League to ask the Supervisory Commission to undertake the duty of formulating terms of transfer to the United Nations. The Preparatory Commission was informed of this action. Any agreement reached will be subject to final approval by the League of Nations Assembly to be convened early in 1946. Among the League agencies to be considered are the health section which has been operating in Washington, the economic and transit section in Princeton, the drug control section and the International Labor Organization.

UNESCO

The Constitution establishing the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization was signed in London on November 16th by delegates of forty-four nations who had been meeting together since November 1st. It recognizes in its preamble that "since wars begin in the minds of men, it is in the minds of men that the defenses of peace must be constructed."

At the same time a Preparatory Educational, Scientific and Cultural Commission was set up, composed of one representative from each country, to prepare the way for the first conference of the Organization.

The main tasks of the Preparatory Commission, which is now meeting in London, are to make arrangements with UNO regarding the precise relationship of UNESCO under Article 63 of the Charter; to prepare the agenda for the first conference scheduled for Paris next year; to make recommendations on program and budget; and to examine the educational, scientific and cultural needs of countries devastated by the war. All decisions will be subject to final approval of the General Conference.

The United States, China, Britain, France, Brazil, Norway, Belgium, Mexico, India, The Netherlands, Poland, Canada, Colombia and Greece have been elected to the Executive Committee, which shall exercise all powers of the Commission. The fifteenth place provided for on the Committee has been saved for Russia, which did not attend the conference, maintaining the position that it should have been called by the Economic and Social Council when that organ is set up.

The Preparatory Commission will move to Paris, which was selected as the site of UNESCO, when the Constitution comes into force by acceptances from twenty signatory powers.

UNO

Five hundred delegates of fifty-one nations represented in the Preparatory

Commission of the United Nations have been meeting in London since November 24th. Dr. Eduardo Zuleta-Angel, Colombian Ambassador to Peru, was appointed chairman. Dimitri Manuilsky of the Ukrainian S.S.R., and Paul Henri Spaak of Belgium were appointed first and second vice chairmen.

Eight technical committees were set up: General Assembly, Security Council, Economic and Social Council, Trusteeship Council, Legal, Administrative and Budgetary, League of Nations, and General Questions.

The Preparatory Commission, which operates by simple majority on procedural matters and two-thirds vote on matters of substance, has been making rapid progress. The majority of the Executive Committee's recommendations were quickly approved.

Chief controversial issues before "PRECO," as it is called, were: site of UNO; Trusteeship Council; formation of the secretariat; and relations with the ILO and other League agencies.

Location of the headquarters was a troublesome question. The Preparatory Commission finally approved on December 15th the recommendation of the Executive Committee that the headquarters be located in the United States. Selection of the particular site was left to the Assembly. It was recommended that UNO have full ownership of the land and buildings in the zone so as to provide public services and grant diplomatic immunities to UNO officials; that adequate means of communication be guaranteed; that free visas be granted to all persons connected with UNO, including accredited press, radio and film representatives; that the airport, railway station and broadcasting facilities belong to UNO. Establishment of a regional center in Europe seems likely. Final decision will be taken by the General Assembly in January, but it appears that it will approve the recommendations of the Preparatory Commission.

On the question of trusteeship, the Preparatory Commission debated whether to appoint a temporary Trusteeship Council pending the establishment of the Trusteeship System. So far none of the nations have announced acceptance of the trusteeship principle for their mandates or colonies, so it would be impossible to set up a permanent Trusteeship Council. Russia feared that setting up a temporary council might delay the establishment of the permanent one; others, including the British, felt it would be the best way to get the Trusteeship System going. As yet the United States has not declared its position with reference to the strategic bases in the Pacific which it intends to occupy for security purposes. If this country were to announce that it would place such bases under the Trusteeship System, other nations might be more ready to announce that they would accept trusteeship for their mandates.

The issue on the secretariat was whether each organ should have its separate secretariat, or whether there should be a "functional" secretariat with a pooled staff to serve various organs.

Since October 24th when the Charter came into force with the deposit of the twenty-ninth instrument of ratification additional ratifications have been coming in quickly. By early December forty-five had been deposited with the State Department and it appears certain that all of the fifty-one nations signatory to the Charter will have deposited their ratifications by the time the General Assembly meets in January.

In addition to the recommendations from PRECO regarding the various Councils and the Commission on Human Rights, the General Assembly will have before it the statement of President Truman and Prime Ministers Attlee and Mackenzie King that UNO should appoint a commission on atomic energy. It would seem fitting for the General Assembly to appoint such a commission rather than the Security Council because, according to the Charter, the Assembly is charged with the formulation of the broad principles of peace and security, including the regulation of armaments.

The decision to ask UNO to establish a commission on atomic energy will probably change the character of the General Assembly meeting, which had originally been planned as a procedural meeting. There are indications that it will serve as a forum for a full-scale debate on pressing world problems.

UNRRA

Appropriation of the $550,000,000 balance of this year's pledge of $1,350,000,000 to UNRRA was passed by Congress. The conference report ironing out the differences between the Senate and House Bills substituted for the "freedom of the press" amendment of the House a compromise amendment "requesting" the President to facilitate free reporting by American press and radio representatives in the recipient country.

A bill authorizing $1,350,000,000 contribution for UNRRA for the year 1946 was passed by Congress with the same compromise amendment. Final approval was given on December 19th for an appropriation of $750,000,000 as a first installment of this country's second-year contribution. This act was necessary before the money, which was needed by January 1st, was actually available to UNRRA.

PICAO

Since October 13th the Council of the Provisional International Civil Aviation Organization has been in continuous session in Montreal, which was selected as its headquarters. Dr. Edward Warner of the United States is president.

While waiting for ratifications of the Permanent Convention to come in, the Provisional Organization is proceeding to lay the ground work for the permanent organization. The Provisional Organization will be replaced by the Permanent Organization when 26 states have ratified the Permanent Convention which was agreed upon by representatives of fifty-four nations at the conference in Chicago last December. The Permanent Convention has not yet been ratified by the United States.

United States

On December 4th the Senate passed a resolution designed to make effective this country's membership in the United Nations Organization. The bill, known as the United Nations Participation Act, was passed by the House on December 18th. It authorizes the President to appoint an American representative to the Security Council with rank of Ambassador and a deputy with ministerial rank. It further authorizes the President with the consent of the Senate, to appoint five delegates to the General Assembly and to designate such other officials to commissions and committees of UNO as may be necessary.

According to the provisions of the bill the American representative on the Security Council can vote in accordance with instructions from the President. It will not be necessary to obtain Congressional approval before ordering economic sanctions or making troops available to the Security Council on its call, if these do not exceed the limits specified in prior agreements.

The Participation Act gives the President authority to negotiate an agreement with the Security Council, "subject to the approval of Congress by appropriate act or joint resolution, providing for the numbers and types of armed forces . . . to be made available to the Security Council at its call."

The resolution follows the position of the Administration that inasmuch as the Charter was passed as a treaty requiring two-thirds vote of the Senate, enabling legislation should be enacted by joint Congressional resolution.

Senator Wayne Morse of Oregon has introduced a resolution which would recognize compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice in accordance with Article 36 of the Statute. This is necessary if the Court is to be a truly effective instrument of international law. Forty-two nations at one time or another conferred compulsory jurisdiction on the Permanent Court of International Justice. The Statute of the new Court provides that declarations made under the Statute of the World Court which are still in force shall be considered acceptances of compulsory jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice. Thus many of the United Nations are already on record as accepting compulsory jurisdiction.

A plan to make possible full participation of the United States Government in UNO and its specialized agencies has been submitted to President Truman. The plan is said to have the approval of both the Department of State and the Bureau of the Budget. It proposes the setting up of an executive committee of Cabinet members and heads of bureaus that will be concerned with United Nations activities. Edward R. Stettinius, Jr., United States delegate to UNO, is suggested as chairman of the executive committee and would act as its liaison with UNO.

Adequate domestic machinery will be necessary to deal with the many specialized agencies of UNO if this country is to play its proper role in world affairs. The interests of the specialized agencies cut across Department lines. It would be impractical for any one agency to have to deal with several Departments; or for any one Department to have to deal with several agencies. The interests of all could be coordinated in the proposed executive committee.

Bretton Woods

With the ratification of Bretton Woods by Great Britain, it became certain that the agreements would go into effect. The eligible nations will sign the documents at a ceremony at the Department of State on December 27th.

Unless ratifications had been forthcoming by December 31st of this year by nations whose quotas total 65 per cent of the Monetary Fund of $8,800,000,000 and 65 per cent of the International Bank totalling $9,100,000,000, the two institutions could not come into being. The Bretton Woods agreements were signed on July 22nd, 1944, by the representatives of forty-four nations attending the conference, but all signatures were subject to ratification by their respective governments.

The United States ratified the agreements during the summer, but many countries waited to see what Great Britain would do about them, as her participation in the Fund and the Bank was essential to their success.

Once the financial conversations between Great Britain and this country were successfully concluded, and an agreement on a loan reached, Great Britain took up the question of Bretton Woods. The agreements were quickly passed. In the meantime several smaller nations had already ratified.

Among the nations expected to sign the documents at the State Department ceremony on December 27th are Belgium, China, Czechoslovakia, Canada, Colombia, Cuba, Ecuador, Egypt, France, Guatemala, The Netherlands, Philippines, Union of South Africa, and Yugoslavia.

The fate of the Fund and the Bank was closely related to the proposed International Trade Organization and to the whole question of relief and rehabilitation, and, in fact, to the success of the United Nations Organization itself.

BOOK REVIEWS

Edited by ROSA KOHLER

A CATHOLIC LOOKS AT THE WORLD, by Francis E. McMahon. Vanguard Press. $2.75.

Written by an Associate Professor of Philosophy, this book is indicative of the most progressive Catholic thought of today. Francis E. McMahon was among that vanguard of loyal Americans who understood the menace of totalitarianism, and fought against it. He was active in the Committee to Defend America and the Fight for Freedom Committee. From his book, we learn that he challenged a public statement made by a Catholic priest that the Committee to Defend America was a "mass-murder" committee. He even had the courage to write an "Open Letter to De Valera" asking that British ships be allowed to use Irish naval bases.

The author complains that the more constructive Catholic statements are never publicized by newspapers or commentators, while the most reactionary Catholic views, Coughlinites, and blasts against Communism are given headlines.

According to Francis E. McMahon, it was Christianity that brought us to this present point of civilization. It was Christianity that first distinguished between spiritual and temporal power. Previous to the advent of Christianity, rulers of people were also their religious heads. Christianity, he says, differentiated between the "things of Caesar and the things of God. Thereby it gave a unique character to our Western culture."

Western civilization inherited all the experiences, the tradition and the culture of Christianity, and all of us whether we like it or not are conditioned by this heritage.

The author makes no effort to impose his own personal religion on his readers, but he does stress that the individual has an obligation to God. He says "... a democracy which forgets its God is a democracy that will perish."

The author's convictions are that there is good and there is evil in the world, and that we have a free choice between them. He insists that the problems of the world must be worked out with an intelligent understanding of the good and the evil. Nor has he any patience with those who dally around with excuses that perhaps good is not so good, nor is evil so wicked according to a different set of standards.

The author strikes out against those who are indifferent to spiritual values in our political decisions. Liberals and Protestants, Anti-Semites and just plain citizens come in for their share of censure. He is most critical, however, of his fellow Catholics, because he says, "I measure the degree of their failures by the high vocation which history has imposed upon them."

The book has more to do with the philosophy of how the writer arrived at his international viewpoint, than it has to do with discussion of present day problems in this field. However, the author builds up logically to his staunch belief in the United Nations Charter as the best thing we can get at the moment and the hope of improving it as we go along. Nor is he pessimistic as to the outcome.

He takes Russia in his stride and sees no reason why it is necessary to accept Russian ideology in order to cooperate with her for the peace of the world. He thinks that perfectionists will object that he has no moral right to tolerate illegal conduct on the part of Russia. Then he adds, "Perfectionists persist, however, in forgetting that politics is the art of the possible, and more often than not in politics the choice is the lesser of two evils."

Any internationalist will find this book most readable. For Catholics it is certainly a "must" for those who want enlightenment on the moral approach to international solutions.

NATIONALITIES AND NATIONAL MINORITIES, by Oscar I. Janowsky. Macmillan Company. $2.75.

This book deals with the explosive qualities inherent in the problem of minorities, and proposed solutions for those of East-Central Europe, which is admittedly a "war-breeding zone."

The author warns Americans that we have no first hand knowledge of minorities as such in America. Every person came to these shores as an individual and was treated as such. Any so-called "minority" problem affecting Jews, Negroes or Catholics can be solved through our democratic process.

The eastern European problem is that of groups of economic and cultural units of people forced through conquest, persecution or political upheaval to live in an alien atmosphere through no fault of their own. These form actually a nation within a nation, accentuating an already overly conscious nationalism.

Mr. Janowsky approaches this problem by an analysis of the evolution of the states that are multi-national and that have worked out their problem successfully: Switzerland, South Africa and the Soviet Union. He also examines the treatment of the minorities through the League system of Minorities Treaties, which guaranteed human rights, citizenship, language and scholastic rights.

The methods that have proved successful, he then tries to apply to the problem of eastern central Europe. Transfer of populations, no matter how "voluntary," are usually forced migrations. Assimilation also comes to the point of really being compulsory assimilation. As neither of these, according to the author, make toward harmonizing the minorities, other solutions must be forthcoming.

From the chapters on Switzerland, South Africa and the Soviet Union, the author concludes that only through national federation can the problem of these multi-national states become stable. He admits that as long as "international brigandage" prevails, minorities cannot hope for any justice and understanding. He believes we have another chance with the United Nations Charter, and he says, "This time the leaders of the United Nations dare not fail."

THE STORY OF WOODROW WILSON, by Ruth Cranston. Simon and Schuster, Inc. $3.50.

There have been many biographies of Woodrow Wilson and there will probably be many more. The charm of this story by Ruth Cranston is in the human portrayal of Woodrow Wilson, the man.

Mrs. Cranston was a friend of the Wilson family and so has a sympathetic approach to the more intimate details of Wilson's life. She had another advantage in the political appraisal for she worked for some ten years in Geneva.

She tells again the story of the "league that failed" and brings out the principles that are applicable today, and their projection into the future.

Quoting Wilson, she also is content to leave his reputation "to the verdict of history." She says "History never discredits a principle or betrays a man's integrity. History acted more quickly on Wilson's case than in many. Every tenet he fought for is being welded into our lives today."

The author thinks that "the new United Nations Charter is extraordinarily like the League Covenant, and then gives her opinions as to where they differ. She says that "... standing with our feet proudly planted on the League-begotten charter, we declare the League is finished and a failure."

On the success of this new venture into the United Nations, she quotes General Smuts. "The question now is, will they use it?"

Among the Organizations

Edited by FRANCES A. THOMAS

Scientists Federate

The six associations of scientists who have worked on the atomic bomb have recently formed a group called the Federation of Atomic Scientists, with headquarters at 1018 Vermont Avenue, Washington, D.C. The aims of the new Federation are to study the implications of the release of nuclear energy, to create a realization of the dangers to all civilization if nuclear energy is misused, to help create an atmosphere of world security, and to study the relation between national legislation and an adequate international policy.

The Federation went on record as believing that monopoly of the atomic bomb by the United States is impossible, that there can be no specific defense against its destructive effects, and that no nation can feel secure until the problem of the control of atomic power is solved on a world level.

Following are the six groups which comprise the Federation: Association of Oak Ridge Scientists at Clinton Laboratories, The Atomic Scientists of Chicago, The Association of Los Alamos Scientists, The Association of Manhattan Project Scientists, New York City Area, the Atomic Production Scientists, Oak Ridge and The Atomic Engineers, Oak Ridge.

National Grange

The farmers composing the National Grange, at their Kansas City convention, went on record as favoring the placing of control of atomic energy under international trusteeship through the United Nations Charter, and recommended a control committee representing all member nations to ascertain that atomic energy be not developed for war purposes. They also recommended a committee under the Economic and Social Council of UNO to work out a program for developing atomic energy for the benefit of mankind.

To the President

Forty-five organization leaders who support placing the control of atomic energy in the hands of the United Nations joined recently in a message to President Truman congratulating him upon his statement made at a press conference that it should be the General Assembly of the United Nations which should appoint the commission to formulate safeguards against the use of atomic weapons in war. The full text of the statement is as follows: "As individuals and representatives of organizations who have consistently urged that the control of atomic energy be placed in the hands of the United Nations, we wish to express our satisfaction at the statement made at your press conference November 20th that the commission to formulate safeguards against the use of atomic weapons in war should be appointed by the General Assembly of the United Nations, meeting in January. We agree with you that on a subject of this importance all nations should have a voice in selecting the proposed commission.

"We hope the conference held between yourself and Prime Ministers Attlee and King will prove to be a first step toward implementing the United Nations as the fundamental organization through which we can get peace in the world. We pledge our support in this program.

"We sign this statement as individuals, but our organization connection is indicated for purposes of identification."

Student Poll

Organizations working with youth saw they had a job before them when they received the news that only 36 per cent of American high school boys believe the United Nations Organization will prevent another world war during their lifetime. This fact was developed from a nation-wide survey conducted by the Institute of Student Opinion, under the sponsorship of Scholastic Magazines. The poll question was asked of 90,036 high school boys and girls throughout the United States. Forty-one per cent of the girls held the same opinion, indicating a combined poll of "yes" from 39 per cent of both sexes. This might be compared with the survey conducted among adults in October for Fortune Magazine, which indicated that 51.1 per cent thought there was a good chance of avoiding another big war. Forty-eight per cent of both boys and girls queried in the Scholastic poll believed that the United Nations would not be able to prevent war, while 13 per cent held no opinion. "The opinions of these high school students should be a stern warning to politicians, statesmen and the adult world," said M. R. Robinson, publisher of Scholastic Magazines, in announcing the poll results.

FAO Meeting

On Wednesday, December 12th, organization representatives who have been meeting periodically at the Woodrow Wilson Foundation in support of the United Nations and its various specialized agencies gathered once more to get a first-hand report on the newly established Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations. They were addressed by Mr. Howard R. Tolley, chief of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics of the United States Department of Agriculture, who was one of the representatives at the recent Quebec Conference, and by Mr. Gove Hambidge, of the FAO staff. Questions and discussion followed these highly interesting and informative addresses.

WAC

The Women's Auxiliary of the National Council of the Protestant Episcopal Church has joined the Women's Action Committee as a member of the national organization. Fourteen national women's organizations are now members of the WAC.

United Nations News

In January a new monthly publication under the above title will make its bow. Published by the Woodrow Wilson Foundation and edited by Beatrice Pitney Lamb, United Nations News will be devoted exclusively to news and reports about the meetings of UNO, its functional agencies and other international commissions. It will press no point of view nor suggest legislative action. Its aim is to meet the need for information in compact form about the many international organizations in which Americans have assumed responsibility.

Lions Clubs

Lions International asked all its 4,975 Lions Clubs to set apart the week of December 2nd for study of the United Nations Organization. A special Lions Club program has been issued, which contains a suggested opening statement by the Club president, a Compendium of the United Nations Charter, and a group of questions, designed to aid the discussion. A suggested resolution is also included, which pledges the support of the members to the principles enunciated in the United Nations Charter. The November issue of The Lion contained a special article by Senator Connally on UNO. This magazine, we are told by the Secretary General, Mr. Melvin Jones, is also printed in Spanish, and goes into fifteen different countries and approximately 23,500 homes.

VFW

The November issue of Foreign Service, the Post-Encampment number of the magazine published monthly by the Veterans of Foreign Wars, contained in addition to the complete story of the national Encampment, held in October in Chicago, the resolutions adopted by the Encampment. We note particularly Point 3 in Resolution 1,

"That the member states should strengthen the United Nations to whatever extent necessary so that the organization will have the means and the strength to prevent these new scientific discoveries from being used to destroy mankind. The United Nations must also have the means and the wisdom to insure the proper use of these scientific discoveries for the happiness of all mankind."

Speakers Bureau,
American Association for the United Nations, Inc.,
45 East 65th St.,
New York 21, N. Y.

Dear Mrs. Boorstein:

We have your letter of January 2nd requesting a supply of literature forwarded to Mrs. Murray Mandel to be used by a local speaker before a Y.W.C.A. group and have taken the necessary steps to have this material mailed to Mrs. Mandel.

We are also taking this opportunity to forward under separate cover copies of

UNHRA in Outline and Up-to-Date
Raymond Swing Comments
Eisenhower's Plea

to your Association which we feel you might like to have on hand for your convenience and distribution.

Yours sincerely,

Dear Miss Linzer:

We have just produced the enclosed supplement to the Selected Reading List of UNRRA. We are sending you under separate cover 25 copies and will be glad to send more if you need them.

Shortly we will re-edit this supplement and the original reading list and produce it as a revised edition of the Selected Reading List.

If you have any suggestions please send them on to us.

Yours sincerely,

Dear Mrs. Boorstein:

In reply to your letter of December 27th, 1945 requesting literature for distribution to a group of fifty people, I regret to advise that your letter was received too late to forward this requested material. However, we are forwarding to you twenty-five copies of "UNRRA in Outline and Up-To-Date" and enclosing in this letter a list of available printed literature.

If there is any further material desired we will be very happy to serve you.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Mrs. Sawyer:

Would you please mail enough literature for a group of 50 people to:

Mrs. Jeanette Feierman, President
Parents Association
c/o Public School No. 15
325 E. 4th Street
New York, New York

Mrs. Cecelia Davidson has been so kind as to say she will take an engagement to speak to this group of parents at 2:15 P.M. on Tuesday, January 8, on the subject, "How UNRRA Works".

We would appreciate the material being mailed direct to Mrs. Feierman at the school. Thank you so much.

Dear Mr. Casgrain:

Your letter of November 8 has recently been referred to the Speakers Bureau. Enclosed are sheets of stickers on which we have typed the names of those on our list whom we think might be interested in your Speaker's Kit. If you will mail the kits direct to them, we shall much appreciate your kindness. Of course, we do not know whether these people will wish to make talks on the subject of UNRRA and the need for help abroad, but we feel sure that since they actively engaged in organizational work, at least they will pass the information on to their groups.

We have previously sent some of your Kits, which were left over after a meeting on UNRRA which we held here, to other names on our speakers' list; and we are also asking Mrs. Sawyer to see that literature is sent to all the meetings on UNRRA in this vicinity to which she is sending speakers from Washington.

Sincerely yours,

Mary E. Kiplinger

Dear Mrs. Kober:

I have just been going over the correspondence about the Edmison tour and have realized belatedly that I have never thanked you adequately for all you did to make the Edmison visit to the Rocky Mountain Area so worthwhile. The time allotted seems to have been utilized to the fullest extent and from the letters we have received from the various places where he spoke, I judge the groups were interested in what he had to say.

Major Edmison himself was well pleased with the arrangements and the response.

I realize what a considerable amount of work you must have put in, in connection with his appearances, and want you to know that we here in this office appreciate all your cooperation.

My dear Miss Sawyer:

We want to express our thanks to you and to UNRRA for sending Major Edmondson to us. We have had the finest reports from his meetings in all the three states. I do not believe it would be possible to send out a person better equipped to present the ~~actual~~ picture of the situation as it is. His talk and the films made an unforgettable impression. We have had favorable comments.

I would like to take this opportunity too, to thank you for your speakers kits. I have used them myself and I have instructed others to use them so I know the material is put before a great many groups of people.

Dear Miss Linzer:

One of my friends has given me an answer to LIFE'S editorial on UNRRA and I thought you might like to have several copies of it.

The State Department is preparing No. 5 of its Foreign Affairs Outline on Relief and Rehabilitation. I am sure that you will want a substantial number of these Outlines and therefore I am giving you advance notice before they are printed. We have cooperated with the State Department in providing an additional supply of this Outline but the order should be placed directly with the State Department.

I am also sending you a reprint of General Eisenhower's speech. We will have additional reprints of this if you care to have them.

This material is being mailed to you under another cover together with a few copies of a reprint of the radio broadcast OUR FOREIGN POLICY. OUR FOREIGN POLICY.

Gentlemen:

request for
Mrs. Alonzo Petteys, of Brush, Colorado, has asked me for a copy of the U.N.R.R.A. Speaker's Kit. She has done some speaking on the United Nations Charter and is very anxious to organize her own town and others near-by to support the whole
U.N.O. program.

I know she will make good use of your material. Her address is:

Dear Mrs. Kober:

I had to clear the Mission schedule somewhat before being able to reply to your telegram of Friday. However, we have sent you a day letter as enclosed.

I am sorry that I had not written you fully about the slides. I had written Miss Pacht about it in my letter of 5 October and was a little confused as to the information I had sent you separately.

We are very much pleased that you feel you can make all these arrangements in the Rocky Mountain Area. I assume from your wire that instead of getting off in Denver on the tenth of November, the Missions should go straight through to some spot in Wyoming. Won't you let us know about that in detail so that I can pass the word on to them? The question of procuring a sleeper out of Days, Kansas is involved, and getting tickets from Kansas City through.

With many thanks for all your help,

Sincerely yours,

Dear Mrs. Kober:

The Edisons will need a hotel room when they arrive in Denver on 10 November. Won't you be good enough to make a reservation for them? x I assume you will also be making some arrangements for hotel reservations in the other cities where you are making arrangements for them to speak. This does not, of course, mean that you or the other groups will be responsible for the bill, but with the present shortage of hotel rooms it seems to be necessary to make reservations sometime in advance.

Dear Mrs. Stern:

I telephoned your office after hours tonight, and left the message that Mr. Rolf Nugent has agreed to speak at the dinner of the Kiwanis Club in Valley Stream, Long Island, on Tuesday night, 30 October. I found that he was planning to stay over in New York until Wednesday, so this fitted in very well with his plans.

Enclosed is a copy of a biographical statement, which may be useful to the chairman of the meeting.

I asked the person who took the message to ask you to send me at once the details of the meeting - time, place, name of chairman, how long Mr. Nugent should speak, etc. - so that I might give them to him before he leaves Washington on Friday night. On second thought, and since the mails are somewhat uncertain these days, may I ask you to send a copy of your letter to Miss Nisley at the Russell Sage Foundation, 130 East 22nd Street, New York City. If the information misses him here, she will see that he gets it there on Monday or Tuesday.

Dear Mrs. Hober:

A day or so ago I sent you a telegram as follows: "Biographies and photographs of Ednaism airmailed today. It takes an hour to run through slides. Therefore, two speeches per day sufficient. As he is on speaking tour for UNHRA no expense involved."

I assume that in making the engagements for Major Ednaism you are in consultation with Miss Elizabeth Fackl at the University who also wrote me about some possible engagements for him in Colorado. At the moment we are making arrangements for him to leave Chicago on Saturday, 3 November for Kansas City, Missouri. He has an engagement in Topeka, Kansas, on 6 November and will make one or two other stops in Kansas before going on to Denver, where, as I telegraphed Miss Fackl, he should arrive at noon on the tenth.

I told her/ that he would be available until the twenty-second which I assume is Thanksgiving Day in Colorado as well as here. As a matter of fact we have not yet scheduled him through the South so that if you found it desirable to place his New Mexico engagements after Thanksgiving that would be possible if you will wire me at once as to when he will be free to go from New Mexico to Texas.

I should not care to send him far afield in Wyoming but Cheyenne and Laramie which you mentioned would be satisfactory.

I am delighted that you and Miss Fackl can arrange the engagements in the Rocky Mountain area. I should be grateful if you can give us a general idea of what the schedule is likely to be so that I can keep in touch with Major Ednaism's movements in a general way.

Dear Mrs. Stern:

Since writing you on the 6 October I find that Mr. Samuel Rosenberg who has been with the UNRRA staff in Yugoslavia is to be in New York for several days the first of next week and could take on some speaking engagements.

Another member of the staff, Colonel L. B. Von Spech is there this week and is staying at the Hotel Holland, 351 W 42nd Street, N.Y.C. through Thursday. He has a speaking engagement for Wednesday night but I believe could undertake something else if you had any calls on such short notice.

Some sheets giving the "Who's Who" of each of these persons are enclosed.

Gentlemen:

Thank you very much for your Speakers' Kit material. I have been making very good use of it. A number of places where I have spoken wished to make a continued study. Would it be possible for you to send as soon as possible Speakers Kits to the attached list of persons.

People are really interested and I am sure will use this material to the very best advantage. I realize this is a rather long list but these are people who have made requests for additional information on UNRRA and they are all local leaders.

Very sincerely,

At the request of Mrs. L. Allen Beck, Executive Secretary, Rocky Mt. Regional Office, American Association for the United Nations, Inc., we are sending you under another cover, one of our Speaker's Kits. We are also placing your name on the list to receive future issues of our monthly publications.

The speech outlines are being revised at this time and therefore could not be included. We shall be glad to send them to you as soon as they are available.

If you would like additional copies of any of the printed material for distribution to any group with which you may be in contact, please let us know.

Dear Mrs. Stern:

I have not replied to your letter requesting names of people in the New York area who might be available for some talks about UNRRA because we have not had staff members there regularly and the transitory ones had made their arrangements on such short notice that it hardly seemed worthwhile to let you know.

Now, however, I may say that Mrs. Kathleen S. Loughan has an engagement in New York for the early afternoon of the 24th and Mr. Rolf Nugent for the early afternoon of 1 November. Both of these would be available for other engagements in the late afternoon, say four or four-thirty, or in the evening if the meetings were sufficiently worthwhile to keep them over.

Mrs. Cecilia Lazovsky Davidson who had been abroad for UNRRA for nearly a year, is now on leave and is at her home in New York. She could be called upon for occasional groups.

Mr. Frederick I. Daniels of the Brooklyn Bureau of Social Services who was on our staff last year, has already made a number of speeches about UNRRA and may be willing to take on others. He is, of course, very tied up with his own organization at the present time.

Sincerely yours,

Olive L. Sawyer

Dear Miss Linzer:

We shall be delighted to give you 75 of our Speaker's Kits so that you may make a complete coverage of your local chapters. These will go forward to you early next week, as soon as the pamphlet UNRA in Outline as of 1 September comes from the printer, so that we can include this up-to-date information.

I find that Miss Sawyer had also sent a copy of the Kit to Miss Ragonetti who she thought might be able to distribute it to some of her speakers. If additional copies are required for that purpose, we should be glad to hear from Miss Ragonetti in time to include kits for her purposes as well as yours.

We have already received a request from Mrs. Dodge for 250 copies of one of the pamphlets in the kit -- Out of the Chaos. These were sent to her earlier this week.

Dear Mrs. Thomas:

I am chagrined that we have not been able to let you know before this who the speakers would be at the meeting on the eighteenth. I had hoped until this morning that either Governor Lehman or Mr. Hendrickson would be able to be in New York. Unfortunately neither can in view of the situation here at the moment.

Mr. Morse Salisbury, Director of Public Information will definitely be there and one other UNRRA staff member. We will have to telephone you about the second person on Monday. In the meantime I am including the following Who's Who information about Mr. Salisbury:

"Mr. Salisbury has had radio and newspaper experience in Kansas and Wisconsin. He was associated with the Information Service of the Department of Agriculture, 1923-44; Director of Information for the Department of Agriculture and the War Food Administration, 1938-44. He is, of course, a citizen of the United States."

In addition, I might say that he has made two trips to Europe this year, first visiting London, Paris, Rome, Cairo and Athens, and more recently for the Council meeting in London. He is, of course, thoroughly familiar with ^{all} UNRRA's activities.

I hope this delay has not seriously inconvenienced you in making your arrangements.

Sincerely yours,

A. E. Casgrain

Dear Mrs. Thomas:

Enclosed is the sheet about Mr. Nugent which I promised to send you. I am sure that Mr. Nugent and Mr. Salisbury will be able to give a very complete coverage of UNRRA's present activities and should provide an interesting and illuminating program.

If there are any other details with which we can help you, please let me know. I understand the meeting is to be held at the Herald Tribune auditorium at three o'clock on Tuesday afternoon the eighteenth.
