Dear Anne,

I don't know if you realise but 2008 is the United Nations Year of Sanitation. This has been arranged to highlight ( and hopefully help) the plight of 2.9 billion people globally that have no access to safe water or toilets.

There are just seven years left for the G8 countries to attain their MGD targets and, despite sanitation being one of the most cost effective ways of reducing child mortality, the progress for water and to a greater extent sanitation are way off target. Would you not therefore agree that the developing world needs a global action plan for both water and sanitation as a matter of priority and that it must be integrated into any plan for development.

I am sending this letter to the Secretary General of the UN as well as Gordon Brown but would be interested to hear your response as my voice in the assembly. Do they have a foreign affairs spokesperson and if so what are their views.

Sincerely,

Dr Matt Thursfield
